Roosevelt was born into a wealthy family in New York City in 1884. Her father died when she was young, and her mother was often absent, so she was raised by her grandmother. Roosevelt's early life was not easy, but she developed a strong sense of independence and a deep compassion for others.

In 1905, Roosevelt married Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who would later become President of the United States. The couple had six children. Roosevelt was a devoted wife and mother, but she also had her own career. She worked as a teacher, a journalist, and a social reformer.

In 1933, Franklin Delano Roosevelt was elected President of the United States. Roosevelt became First Lady, and she quickly used her position to advocate for the poor, the sick, and the elderly. She traveled extensively throughout the country, visiting soup kitchens, hospitals, and factories. She also gave speeches and wrote articles calling for social reform.

Roosevelt was a strong supporter of the New Deal, her husband's program to help the country recover from the Great Depression. She also worked to promote peace and understanding among nations. She was a delegate to the United Nations, and she served as the chair of the UN Commission on Human Rights.

Roosevelt continued to work for social justice and human rights throughout her life. She was a tireless advocate for the poor, the sick, and the elderly. She also worked to promote peace and understanding among nations.

Roosevelt died in 1962 at the age of 78. She is remembered as one of the most influential women in American history. Her legacy of service and activism continues to inspire people around the world.
