The International Campaign Against Grand Corruption is a global initiative to combat grand corruption and recover stolen assets. The campaign was launched in 2012 by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) and the World Bank, and it has since been joined by over 100 countries and organizations.

The campaign's goal is to create a global movement to end grand corruption and promote transparency and accountability in the public sector. The campaign has four main objectives:

1. To raise awareness of the problem of grand corruption and its impact on development.
2. To strengthen the capacity of countries to prevent and combat grand corruption.
3. To promote transparency and accountability in the public sector.
4. To recover stolen assets and return them to their rightful owners.

The campaign has made significant progress towards its goals. The campaign has helped to raise awareness of the problem of grand corruption and its impact on development. The campaign has also helped to strengthen the capacity of countries to prevent and combat grand corruption. For example, the campaign has helped to develop new anti-corruption laws and regulations, and it has helped to train law enforcement officials and prosecutors in how to investigate and prosecute corruption cases.

The campaign has also helped to promote transparency and accountability in the public sector. For example, the campaign has helped to develop new transparency laws and regulations, and it has helped to promote the use of open data and new technologies to increase transparency and accountability.

The campaign has also helped to recover stolen assets and return them to their rightful owners. For example, the campaign has helped to recover billions of dollars in stolen assets from corrupt officials and their associates.

The International Campaign Against Grand Corruption is a major step forward in the fight against corruption. The campaign is making a real difference in the lives of people around the world, and it is helping to create a more just and equitable world.
